Wantagh's Dwindling Historical Markers

By Paul Sigler, Trustee

Wantagh used to have many "blue and buff" New York State historical markers along its main roads indicating buildings or events of historical interest. Sadly, over many decades most of the markers have disappeared, and just a few remain today. We have a list of all the markers that were originally installed and recently we contacted the New York State Archives to inquire as to what additional information, if any, they might have on our Wantagh historical markers.

Here's a little background information on the NYS Historical Marker Program. The New York State Historical Marker program began in 1925 in observance of the 150th anniversary of the American Revolution and continued for over a decade. Many of these markers were installed upstate. In 1935-6 as part of the Long Island Tercentenary, celebrating the first white settlement on Long Island, there was a push to place NYS historical markers along Long Island's main roads. Wantagh, having been settled since the early 1600's, had numerous historical sites.

We heard back from the New York State Archives, and yes, they did have information on Wantagh's historical markers! The information included not only the full text for each marker, but the exact location where each marker was installed. And even more exciting were the 1935 application forms for each marker, some even including a photo of the historical building! It turns out that the application forms were filled out by Wantagh resident Helen Louise Strang (whose house still stands) and who happened to be a historian and DAR member.

Here is a list of the ten Wantagh area NYS historical markers with their original location.

- ◆ 1666 Jackson-Jones Home, installed on Merrick Road and Riverside Drive
- ◆ Cherrywood-Home of Capt. John Seaman 1644, installed on the corner of Wantagh Avenue and Jerusalem Avenue
- ◆ Indian Trail 1664, installed at Sunrise Highway and Seamans Neck Road
- ◆ North Jerusalem Avenue 1644, installed on Wantagh Avenue north of Southern State Parkway
- ◆ Wantagh-First Settlement 1644, installed at Merrick Road and Wantagh Causeway
- ◆ Wantagh-First Settlement 1644, installed on Wantagh Avenue and Merrick Road
- ◆ Richard Jackson 1776, installed on Wantagh Avenue and Stratford Road
- ◆ Grist Mill Site 1704, installed on Merrick Road and Riverside Drive
- ◆ Meeting house 1827, installed on Wantagh Avenue north of Jerusalem Avenue
- ◆ Robert Jackson Home Site 1644, installed on Wantagh Avenue and Homestead Avenue

Out of these ten historical markers, only three remain, Wantagh-First Settlement 1644, now located at the Wantagh Museum, Robert Jackson Home Site 1644, which is still in its original location, and the Indian Trail 1664, located in Seaford. What happened to all the other's? No one knows. The best guess is that over the decades, car accidents, road repair, snow removal, all took their toll. New York State stopped maintaining the signs several decades ago. The Wantagh Preservation Society looks to one day restore these markers, and fulfill their original purpose, the education of the public. 📖
